Co-Parenting

...for Families in Transition

The relationship may have ended, but you still need to finish what you both started: raising your kids to be healthy, productive, and successful members of society.

Co-parenting is about taking your attention off what went wrong, and focusing it on what needs to happen now to reach your common goal of your child’s wellbeing. Which begins with understanding that BOTH of you still need to have ACTIVE roles in your child’s day-to-day life. Yes, parenting is forever a team sport.

BUT...

No buts. Your kid’s future is at stake here. And co-parenting works. It just significantly depends on how, and how well, you function in the role of parent. And here are some options IPI provides to get you there:

TransParenting®

A court-approved, research-based parenting education program designed specifically for families in transition from separation or divorce. A 4-hour workshop where parents learn key communication, relationship, family management, and childrearing skills to help them effectively manage the impact of separation/divorce on the kids, and on self. $50 per parent.

Birth2Eighteen Course®

Building upon what moms & dads already know, B2E cultivates resiliency in families parenting school-aged children, co-parenting, and/or dealing with stressful (even traumatic) circumstances, equipping them with the latest foundational relationship strategies and skills needed to keep their families (working well) together, and proven to enhance parenting (and family) outcomes. B2E meets for 2 hours, once a week, for 8 weeks.

RetMa®

Relationships Matter. In fact, healthy relationships are the foundation of a healthy & successful life. RetMa shows you how to build and sustain healthy, mutually beneficial relationships with the following skills: communication, listening, focus, and stress management. It covers relationship basics, and provides you with the relationship and decision-making skills needed for success.

“Improve your life? Improve your relationships.”
